0.1 Object-oriented programming

It is one of the most effective approaches to writing software. In object-oriented programming you write classes that represent real-world things and situations, and you create objects based on these classes. When you write a class, you define the general behavior that a whole category of objects can have. When you create individual objects from the class, each object is automatically equipped with the general behavior; you can then give each object whatever unique traits you desire. You'll be amazed how well real-world situations can be modeled with object-oriented programming. Making an object from a class is called instantiation, and you work with instances of a class.

0.2 Creating and Using a Class

        """A simple attempt to represent a car."""

        def __init__(self, make, model, year):
            self.make = make
            self.model = model
            self.year = year
        def get_descriptive_name(self):

            long_name = str(self.year) + ' ' + self.make + ' ' + self.model return long_name.title()

        my_new_car = Car('audi', 'a4', 2016)
        print(my_new_car.get_descriptive_name())

0.3 Styling Classes

A few styling issues related to classes are worth clarifying, especially as your programs become more complicated.

1. Class names should be written in CamelCaps. To do this, capitalize the first letter of each word in the name, and don't use underscores.

2. Instance and module names should be written in lowercase with underscores between words.
3. Every class should have a docstring immediately following the class definition. The docstring should be a brief description of what the class does, and you should follow the same formatting conventions you used for writing docstrings in functions. Each module should also have a docstring describing what the classes in a module can be used for.
4. You can use blank lines to organize code, but don't use them excessively. Within a class you can use one blank line between methods, and within a module you can use two blank lines to separate classes.
5. If you need to import a module from the standard library and a module that you wrote, place the import statement for the standard library module first. Then add a blank line and the import statement for the module you wrote. In programs with multiple import statements, this convention makes it easier to see where the different modules used in the program come from.

In [48]: `class Customer:`

    def __init__(self, c_id,c_name, c_age, c_occupation ):
        self.c_id = c_id
        self.c_name = c_name
        self.c_age = c_age
        self.c_occupation = c_occupation

    def __str__(self):
        return "{} \t {} \t {} \t {}".format(self.c_id,self.c_name,self.c_age, self.c.

with open("customers", "r") as f:
    data = f.readlines()

customers = []

print(customers)

In [46]: `working_prof = list(filter(lambda x: x.c_age > 25 and x.c_age < 60 , customers))`

for c in working_prof:
    print(c)
